THE global electronic warfare conference and exhibition

Electronic Warfare is held in collaboration with the Association of Old Crows, and is strongly supported by European and international industry.

What will Electronic Warfare 2010 cover?

Analysis of operational lessons and recognition of the need for new concepts are raising new possibilities and requirements for EW around the globe. Lessons about the importance of EW once forgotten have been relearned, but at great cost. To ensure an enduring EW capability, leaders are now looking to develop and implement EW strategies to ensure preparedness in future.

The conference will enable informed debate on force development, interoperability and the integration of EW.

NATO and many nations around the world are beginning to understand how the electromagnetic operational environment or EW domain, including EW, is critical to operations in all the warfare domains that are as effective – and safe – as possible. Experimentation and force development have demonstrated how this electromagnetic environment, and within it EW, work with the other operational environments of the land, sea, air and space, and the information environment.

This global EW event is helping to shape the future of EW by gathering the best and most original thinkers and practitioners together in Berlin at a critical juncture.

Past Electronic Warfare events have attracted:

32 countries 438 attendees 45 exhibitors
